MAN WITH HOE WINNING.

Wrestling Fertile Texas Lands From Cowboys, Says a Cattleman.

"The man with the hoe is slowly but surely conquering Texas, and the acreage held by the cattlemen is steadily growing less," recently said R. H. Logan, a cattleman from Abilene, Tex., to a reporter of the Kansas City Star at the Coates House.

Mr. Logan, who left Missouri when he was a boy, says the farmers of Texas are beginning to raise a variety of crops, and cotton no longer is king.
Under the varied crop system the farmers are getting rich.

"Cotton is late in Texas this season," said Mr. Logan, "but there will be a big crop. The most serious question that confronts the cotton raisers of Texas is the boll weevil, a small insect that attacks and destroys the cotton blossoms. Nothing has yet been discovered that will exterminate the boll weevils or check their ravages. They came into Texas from the south, and it is said they travel northward at the rate of about seventy miles a year.

They constitute a serious menace to cotton growing in Texas, but it has resulted that their presence is not an unmixed evil. The Texans had planted cotton year after year, and they struggled along to make both ends meet.
When their cotton crops began to be destroyed they were compelled to turn to other crops, and they began planting corn, various cereals and to go into truck farming. Now they raise watermelons, tomatoes and so on. They are getting rich. Texas farmers were never so well off as now—many are really getting rich."

Mr. Logan says that the "glory" of the old time Texas is all gone. "The picturesque cowboy, with his sombrero, his buckskin leggings, his six shooters, has practically disappeared. The cowboys no longer go to town to 'shoot it up.' Texans don't even go armed. Probably," continued Mr. Logan, "many of the citizens of this town go armed, but in Texas we have dropped all that—of most of it, anyway."

His Bridge Falls.

Vancouver, B. C., July 22.—A specia from Salmon Arm, B. C., says: The bridge between the Canadian Pacific railroad and the Columbia River Lumber company's mill at Carlin gave way while a gang of the Columbia River company men were walking on it. C Kown of Knalt and J. Russell of New foundland were killed, and two more were seriously injured. The bridge was about 100 feet high. The whole structure collapsed.
